Official: 40 passengers injured in N. Carolina truck-train crash

RALEIGH, North Carolina

(AP) — Transportation officials say 40 passengers were injured when a train collided with a tractor-trailer that was stuck on the tracks in North Carolina.

State Department of Transportation officials said 25 people were taken to Halifax Regional Medical Center by bus and 15 by ambulance after the collision, which happened about noon Monday.

They said none of the injuries appeared to be life-threatening. A bus will take another 173 passengers who weren't injured to Richmond, Virginia.

Halifax County law-enforcement officials say the collision toppled the Amtrak train's engine onto its side. They say the first two cars of the train toppled after the crash.

Officials say the second car that derailed was a baggage car.

An eyewitness says the tractor-trailer driver was trying to make a difficult right-hand turn. She says the driver jumped out of the truck before the crash. □

Court documents: Wisconsin shooting victim was impulsive

TODD RICHMOND

Associated Press

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — An unarmed black man fatally shot by a white Wisconsin police officer tended to be an impulsive risk-taker and faced a choice between a middle-class lifestyle and the gang world, according to court documents.

The file connected to 19-year-old Tony Robinson's conviction last year for armed robbery shows he was diagnosed with attention-deficit disorder and anxiety and depression.

The documents were contained in a report by a state Department of Corrections agent.

Madison police officer Matt Kenny shot Robinson on Friday evening while investigating a call that the young man was jumping in and out of traffic and had assaulted someone. The officer heard a disturbance and forced his way into an apartment where Robinson had gone.

Authorities said Kenny fired after Robinson assaulted him.

The shooting is the latest in a series of incidents involving white police officers killing unarmed black men over the last year, including in Ferguson, Missouri, where officer Darren Wilson shot unarmed 18-year-old Michael Brown in August. That shooting sparked weeks of unrest.

Madison Police Chief Mike Koval, who is white, has tried to strike a conciliatory tone with the city's black community, calling Robinson's death a tragedy and even going so far as praying with Robinson's grandmother in her driveway hours after the shooting. On Monday, he wrote on his blog that he was sorry Robinson died and hoped his family could find forgiveness in their hearts.

"The police are part of this community — and we share this sense of loss," Koval wrote. □

GOP Letter

PETER BAKER

© 2015 New York Times

WASHINGTON - The White House on Monday sharply rebuked nearly four dozen Republican senators who sent a letter to Iranian leaders just as nuclear negotiations reach a pivotal moment, characterizing the correspondence as an illegitimate interference in House press secretary, said the senators were trying to "essentially throw sand in the gears here" in a way that went beyond the role that was envisioned for Congress in foreign policy by the authors of the Constitution. He said the White House wanted to send a "forceful" rebuttal to the letter because it seemed intent on torpedoing the talks.

"Writing a letter like this that appeals to the hard-line letter, drafted by Sen. Tom Cotton of Arkansas and signed by most of the Republican majority in the Senate, suggested to Iran that reaching a deal with Obama might not stick because Congress would not approve it.

"The next president could revoke such an executive agreement with the stroke of a pen, and future Congresses could modify the terms of the agreement at any time," said the letter, which was disclosed earlier by Bloomberg News.

Cotton said on Monday that he had drafted the letter because Iran's leaders might not understand the U.S. constitutional system.

Unlike a treaty, which would require a two-thirds Senate vote for ratification, the agreement Obama and other world leaders are negotiating with Iran would not automatically go to Congress, but members of both parties are seeking a vote.

Cotton said the terms of the emerging deal made it too risky and noted that a Republican president succeeding Obama could decide not to honor it. Speaking on Fox News, Cotton noted that the agreement under discussion would expire after 10 years.

That alone would "make this deal unacceptable, dangerous to the United States and dangerous to the world."

Cotton said he hoped that Democratic senators might also sign the letter. "And for that matter, I'd encourage Hillary Clinton to join us in saying that Congress must approve any nuclear deal with Iran," Cotton said. □

Tom Cotton, R-Ark., speaks in North Little Rock, Ark. Forty-seven Republican senators warned Monday that any agreement the Obama administration strikes with Iran to limit Tehran's nuclear program may be short-lived unless Congress approves the deal. (AP Photo/Danny Johnston)

President Barack Obama's foreign policy.

The letter, signed by 47 Republican senators and addressed to "leaders of the Islamic Republic of Iran," suggested that the Iranian leaders might not understand the American system and warned them that any deal Obama and other world leaders might reach on the future of its nuclear program would be reversible without congressional approval.

Josh Earnest, the White liners in Iran is frankly just the latest in a strategy, a partisan strategy, to undermine the president's ability to conduct foreign policy and advance our national interests around the world," Earnest said. He linked it to the decision by House Speaker John A. Boehner to invite Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel without consulting the White House to denounce a possible Iran deal in a speech to Congress last week.

Obama levies sanctions on seven Venezuelan officials

JULIE PACE,
JOSHUA GOODMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama slapped sanctions on seven Venezuelan officials Monday, accusing them of perpetrating human rights violations and public corruption in the socialist-governed South American nation. The individuals all come from the top echelon of the state security apparatus that was responsible for cracking down on anti-government protests that rocked Venezuela last year and for pursuing charges against leading opponents.

"Corrupt actions by Venezuelan government officials deprive Venezuela of needed economic resources that could be invested in the Venezuelan people and used to spur economic growth," Treasury Secretary Jacob Lew said in a statement. "These actions also undermine the public trust in democratic institutions and the human rights to which Venezuelan citizens are entitled."

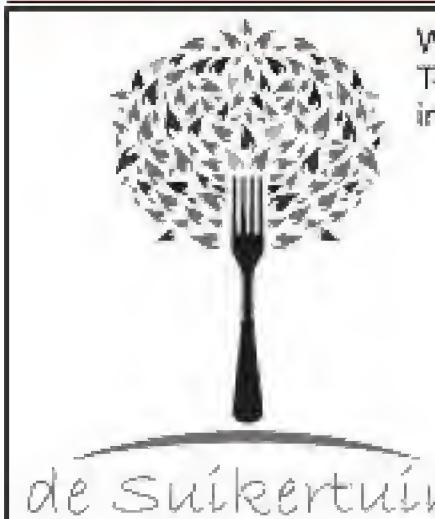

The sanctions come after the U.S. Congress passed legislation late last year authorizing penalties that would freeze the assets and ban visas for anyone accused of carrying out acts of violence or violating the human rights of those opposing Venezuela's government.

Diosdado Cabello, the powerful head of Venezuela's National Assembly, blasted the sanctions as further evidence of U.S. attempts to sow unrest in the oil-rich nation. He said President Nicolas Maduro would personally denounce the U.S. actions when he, Obama and regional leaders travel to Panama next month to attend the Summit of the Americas.

"Mr. Obama, you and your imperialists are going to have to sanction lots of Venezuelans who are willing to give their life to defend the Bolivarian revolution and the project started by Comandante Hugo Chavez," Cabello told a rally of government supporters.

Maximilien Sanchez Arvelaiz, the top Venezuelan diplomat in Washington, was called to Caracas for immediate consultations Monday. The two nations haven't exchanged ambassadors since 2010. Tensions between the U.S. and Venezuela have been on the rise in recent months.

Last summer, the State Department imposed a travel ban on Venezuelan officials accused of abuses during street protests that left dozens of people dead. And last week, Venezuela gave the U.S. two weeks to slash its diplomatic mission there to less than 20 percent of its current size. □

Univ. of Oklahoma president: Frat members 'disgraceful'

George Henderson, left, professor emeritus, joins students at the University of Oklahoma to protest a fraternity's racist comments on March 9, 2015 in Norman, Okla. University President David Boren lambasted members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity on Monday who participated in a racist chant caught on video, calling them disgraceful and their behavior reprehensible, and ordered that their house be vacated by midnight Tuesday.

NORMAN, Oklahoma (AP) — The president of the University of Oklahoma lambasted members of a fraternity who participated in a racist chant caught on video and ordered that they vacate their house by Tuesday night.

President David Boren said he was sickened and couldn't eat or sleep after learning about the video Sunday afternoon. It shows several people on a bus participating in a chant that included a racial slur, referenced lynching and indicated black students would never be admitted to OU's chapter of Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

Boren attended a pre-dawn rally organized by students and lambasted those fraternity members as "disgraceful" and called their behavior "reprehensible." He said the university was looking into a range of punishment, including expulsion. "This is not who we are," Boren said at a midday news conference. "I'd be glad if they left. I might even pay the bus fare for them." The national fraternity released a statement Sunday night saying it was "embarrassed" by the "unacceptable and racist" behavior. It also said it would close the local chapter. Boren later released a statement saying members had until midnight Tuesday to remove their personal belongings from the fraternity house. A fraternity is an organization of male college students in the U.S. A link to the video was posted by OU Unheard, a black student group on campus, after someone anonymously called it to the group's attention. Communications director Alexis Hall said Monday. "We immediately needed to share that with the OU student body," said Hall, a junior. "For students to say they're going to lynch an entire group of people. ... It's disgusting." It's unclear who recorded the video, when it was recorded and who initially posted it online. Hill said a link to the video was sent Sunday afternoon to the student group, which formed in the fall in response to a fatal police shooting in Ferguson, Missouri.

The video appears to have been taken on a charter bus, with at least one of the chanting students wearing a tuxedo.

"I was shocked they were just doing it openly on the bus, like they were proud of it," said Jared Scarborough, a junior in construction science. "From the chant you could tell they had done it before. It wasn't a first-time thing. And it was everybody. And the fist-pumping."

The University of Oklahoma, located in the southern Oklahoma City suburb of Norman, has about 27,000 students, about 5 percent of whom are black. The fraternity system is largely segregated. □

Roadmap to how many people could lose health insurance

MARGOT SANGER-KATZ

© 2015 New York Times

So how many people in how many states could be affected by the big Supreme Court case about Obamacare's insurance subsidies? Good question. A combination of data problems and legal ambiguities make some basic facts about the case difficult to summarize easily. Last week, news media coverage included widely ranging numbers of people who could lose their insurance and where they live. Here's why it's hard to estimate.

We don't know how many states a decision will affect.

The court case, King v. Burwell, concerns whether Supporters of the Affordable Care Act outside the Supreme Court in Washington. Determining the number of people that could be affected by the big Supreme Court case about Obamacare's insurance subsidies is hard to estimate.

(Doug Mills/The New York Times)

subsidies can go to insurance purchasers in every state or just those where a marketplace was established by a state government. If the court rules that only state marketplace customers can keep getting the money, it's not entirely obvious which states will qualify.

There are 13 states, along with the District of Columbia, that have submitted applications to manage their own marketplaces and are now doing all the work that the health law and regulations say they must to have a state-based marketplace. Everyone agrees that the court case will have no impact there.

There are three states - New Mexico, Nevada, and Oregon - that also had their plans to run their marketplaces conditionally approved. But those states failed to set up all the exchange-running functions and now rely substantially on the federal government to help them. That leaves 34 states that are considered part of the federal marketplace system. The briefs and oral arguments before the Supreme Court used the number 34. But the cases actually date to 2014, when the state lineup was slightly different. And the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals found, in a similar case, that 36 states could be affected by the ruling.

How the three in-between states are treated will most likely depend on the details of the court's ruling and the administration's regulatory response. There are also optimists who think that, with some regulatory tinkering, the Obama administration could wave through a few more states that are running most of their exchange functions but have not officially applied to become state-based. That means there is a slight chance that the decision could come to affect fewer than 34 states.

To reflect that uncertainty, The Upshot has been saying that the case could affect residents of up to 37 states, though many experts think that 34 states is the most likely number.

The sign-up period just ended last month. The administration has published a total number of people who selected health plans - 8.8 million in 37 states - but not the number of them in each state or the percentage in each state who are getting subsidies to help them pay their premiums. Using older estimates of both things and doing a little math, the Kaiser Family Foundation calculated that about 7.5 million people in 34 states have picked plans and qualify for subsidies.

Picking a plan is not exactly the same thing as having insurance and getting an Obamacare subsidy. Last year, about 15 percent of the people who signed up either never paid their premiums or dropped out of coverage after a few months. The dropout rate will probably be lower this year, but experts expect that the number of people actually enrolled in coverage will be smaller than the sign-up numbers.

To reflect that uncertainty, The Upshot has been saying that about 7 million people could lose subsidies if the court rules against the government, but other estimates are defensible. Some people who would lose subsidies if the court rules against the government would immediately drop coverage. Others would keep paying for insurance even if their premiums went way up. If the subsidies disappear this year, there will be huge price spikes for subsidized customers this year. □

Disputing credit report could get easier under new rules

New York AG Eric Schneiderman speaks during a news conference, in New York. The three largest credit reporting agencies will change the way they handle records in a major revamp long sought by consumer advocates. The changes were announced Monday, March 9, 2015, after talks between Equifax, Experian, TransUnion and Schneiderman.

AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Disputing a mistake on your credit report could get easier and the effects of medical debt less severe under changes being made by the three largest credit-reporting agencies.

The Monday announcement by the agencies — Equifax, Experian and TransUnion — comes after months of negotiations between the companies and New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman.

Consumer advocates have long sought a revamp that would reduce errors on credit report and make correcting them easier. Data collected by the agencies on hundreds of millions of people are used to create credit scores, which can determine who gets a loan and how much interest is paid on it.

"The nation's largest reporting agencies have a responsibility to investigate and correct errors on consumers' credit reports. Under the changes announced Monday, people who contest items in their credit reports will receive more information concerning those disputes, including instructions on what they can do if they don't like the answer they get. In a bid to increase accuracy, medical debts won't be reported until after a 180-day waiting period to allow time for insurance payments to be applied. The agencies agreed to remove from credit reports previously reported medical collections that have been or are being paid by insurance companies.

This comes after a move in August by Fair Isaac Corp., the company behind the commonly used FICO credit score, in which it announced that medical debt would have a smaller effect on the score.

It also said at the time that debts that go to collection agencies and are repaid wouldn't count against a consumer's FICO score. Equifax, Experian and TransUnion are honing their focus to better handle disputes with consumers and to help victims of identity theft and fraud.

The three credit reporting agencies will jettison reports on debts that didn't arise from a contract or agreement with the consumer, such as tickets or fines. The changes are intended to provide people with more transparency and more simple navigation when dealing with the bureaus that hold their credit reports.

The plan gives hope to consumers that have been frustrated with the quality and accuracy of their reports, the National Foundation for Credit Counseling said in a statement. □

Syria's march toward destruction reaches its 4th year

RYAN LUCAS

Associated Press

BEIRUT (AP) — It began in March 2011 with a few words spray-painted on a schoolyard wall: "Your turn is coming, doctor." The doctor in question was Syrian President Bashar Assad, a trained ophthalmologist whose family has ruled the country for more than 40 years.

Inspired by uprisings rippling across the Arab world, Syrians flooded the streets for largely peaceful demonstrations demanding change and political reforms. The security services greeted them with clubs, bludgeons and bullets. The protests persisted in the face of an escalating government crackdown before the opposition eventually took up arms,

In this December 2014 photo released by SANA, Syrian President Bashar Assad, center, speaks with Syrian troops during his visit to the front line in the eastern Damascus district of Jobar, Syria. slowly turning the uprising into a voracious civil war that continues to devour the country and drag the region into its maelstrom.

Four years on, there is no end in sight. As Syria marks the fourth anniversary of the uprising, here's a look at the conflict, its enormous price and how we got here:

CIVIL WAR'S TOLL?

Staggering, by any measure. More than 220,000 people have been killed and an estimated 1 million wounded in a country with a pre-war population of 23 million.

Nearly 4 million people have fled Syria, putting a massive burden on the countries taking them in — Lebanon, Turkey, Jordan and Iraq. Another 7.8 million people are displaced within Syria, part of an estimated 12.8 million who are in dire need of humanitarian assistance. Diseases eradicated years ago, such as polio, have staged a comeback as the health care system has collapsed. Bridges, roads, power plants, schools, hospitals, entire neighborhoods and even towns have been destroyed. Aleppo, once the country's largest city and its commercial capital, has been split apart and devastated by rebels and government forces.

Syria's social fabric is equally in tatters. The country is home to a tapestry of faiths and ethnicities — Sunni and Shiite Muslims, Alawites, Druze, Kurds and Christians. Before the war, the various communities by and large co-existed peacefully and even intermarried.

HOW IS ASSAD STILL IN POWER?

The Syrian leader's grip on power looked shaky in 2012, prompting predictions that his fall was imminent. But Assad, his inner circle and security establishment proven remarkably resilient. They managed to shore up their hold on Damascus and the urban centers in the heavily populated western half of the country. Support from Iran, a close ally, has proven instrumental in steadyng Assad. On the military front, Tehran has provided advisers and billions of dollars in aid. It has helped train tens of thousands of Syrian para-military fighters known as the National Defense Forces, which fight on front lines across the country. Tehran's greatest contribution may be roping in Shiite militias from across the region — particularly Lebanon's Hezbollah but also fighters from Iraq — to reinforce the government's beleaguered troops.

WHAT DOES THE FUTURE HOLD?

Nothing points to the conflict ending anytime soon. The government and the opposition view the war as an existential struggle and have yet to bleed themselves out. The Islamic State group is focusing its efforts on building its self-declared caliphate and wages war against anyone that stands in its way — Assad, rebels, Kurds.

Every diplomatic effort so far has failed. Peace talks between the opposition and the government last year broke down after two rounds and zero progress. A Russian initiative this year to bring the two sides to the negotiating table in Moscow fizzled quickly after the main opposition figures boycotted.

The current U.N. envoy to Syria, Staffan de Mistura, has set himself the more modest goal of trying to "freeze" the fighting in Aleppo, which he envisions as a first step toward a wider easing of hostilities. But even this plan faces considerable obstacles and has been greeted with skepticism. □

Nemtsov unlikely killed by Islamic extremists, friends say

LAURA MILLS
Associated Press

MOSCOW (AP) — Supporters of slain Russian opposition politician Boris Nemtsov dismissed suggestions Monday that his shooting could have been motivated by Islamic extremism.

Five men are in custody in connection with the Feb. 27 shooting, and all of them are from the predominantly Muslim region of Chechnya, or other parts of the restive north Caucasus.

Chechen leader Ramzan Kadyrov has said one of the main suspects, Zaur Dadaev, could have been motivated by Nemtsov's said he wasn't an enemy of Islam. "The attempt to convince the public that Nemtsov was an obvious target for Islamic radicals doesn't stand up to criticism," Ilya Yashin told the Associated Press on Monday. "This version is extremely convenient for [President] Vladimir Putin, because it takes both him and his inner circle out of the line of fire." Five men, including Dadaev, have been detained in connection with Nemtsov's killing. They all appeared in a Moscow court Sunday, where Dadaev and another suspect were charged in connection with shoot-which remains controversial among many Russians. Chechnya suffered two intense wars over the past two decades between Russian forces and separatist rebels increasingly under the sway of fundamentalist

Islam. That reinforced the stereotype among many Russians of Chechens as violent extremists. □

"Everyone who knows Zaur confirms that he is a deeply religious person who, like all Muslims, was shocked by the actions of Charlie and comments (of those) who supported the publication of the caricatures," Kadyrov said in a statement late Sunday.

In the Charlie Hebdo attack on Jan. 7 in Paris, 12 people were killed by two gunmen, who were later killed by police.

Nemtsov criticized the Charlie Hebdo attackers in an online post, saying that Islam was a "young religion that is current in its Middle Ages, and there is a long fight ahead to defeat the Islamic inquisition."

One of the judges said Dadaev had acknowledged involvement, but Dadaev didn't admit guilt in the courtroom, according to news agencies.

Footage from state channel NTV shows Dadaev turning to the camera and saying "I will say to you: I love the Prophet Muhammad."

Dadaev had been an officer in the Chechen police troops, though Kadyrov said he had left the forces under unclear circumstances. The other suspect who was charged, Anzor Gubashev, denied being guilty.

Supporters of Nemtsov, however, believe that by casting blame on Islamic extremists, investigators are attempting to shift blame away from the government and onto a minority

Eurozone warns Greece to stop wasting time on reforms plan

BRUSSELS (AP) — Greece's European creditors told Athens to stop wasting time and flesh out as of Wednesday its proposals for economic reforms, which are crucial to releasing vital funds to assure financial survival.

"We have spent now two weeks apparently discussing who meets whom where, in what configuration, and on what agenda and it is a complete waste of time," Jeroen Dijsselbloem, the Dutch finance minister who heads the meeting known as the Eurogroup, said Monday. "We've talked about this long enough now," he told reporters, after the fourth ministerial meeting on Greece in Brussels in a month.

After a meeting of the 19-nation group using the euro single currency, Greek Finance Minister Yanis Varoufakis agreed that technical talks on the reforms proposed by Greece to secure a four-month bailout extension should begin in Brussels on Wednesday and denied holding up the process.

The eurozone agreed last month to extend Greece's bailout until June, but before it actually pays out more rescue loans it wants to approve a detailed list of reforms by April. So far, Greece has only outlined some of its proposals in broad terms.

After an initial list of seven initiatives, Varoufakis said that Greece would soon provide "another batch of seven or eight reforms" for the European Commission, the European Central Bank and the International Monetary Fund to assess.

The final 7.5 billion euro installment of Greece's 240 billion euro international bailout is still pending, and without it, the country is quickly running out of funds and faces repayments of IMF loan installments this month. Dijsselbloem said there could be "no talk of disbursement [of bailout funds] if there is no implementation."

He said the eurozone would consider disbursing the loans in parts, but that could happen only after Greece had begun implementing its reforms.

Greece's government was voted into power in January on promises of abolishing the budget austerity that accompanied the bailout. But it has had to roll back on a series of pre-election promises, including seeking a write-off of most of the country's debt. Over the weekend, Varoufakis said in an interview with Italy's Corriere de la Sera newspaper that if the creditors do not eventually approve the reforms, his government could call new elections or a referendum.

The government later clarified any referendum would be on the content of reforms and fiscal policy.

Among other reforms, Varoufakis' suggestions include using "non-professional inspectors" such as students, housewives and tourists, to crack down on tax evasion, according to a leaked copy of the letter. The inspectors would be hired on a short-term casual basis "to pose, after some basic training, as customers, on behalf of the tax authorities, while 'wired' for sound and video," the letter says. □

EU urges Libya to agree on national unity government in days

EDITH M. LEDERER

Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The European Union's foreign affairs chief urged Libya's feuding political leaders on Monday to agree on a national unity government, warning that this needs to happen "within days, not weeks."

Federica Mogherini told the U.N. Security Council in a wide-ranging speech that the Libyan crisis is worsening, with terrorist acts spurred by the Islamic State extremist group spreading thousands of miles from the heart of the Middle East into Libya, its neighbors and other African nations.

Mogherini strongly backed U.N. envoy Bernardino Leon's efforts toward reaching a Libyan political agreement.

He said the EU and the international community are "ready and willing to provide all kinds of assistance" to a national unity government.

Since the overthrow of longtime dictator Moammar Gadhafi in 2011, Libya has fragmented into different warring militias and now has rival governments — one in the east, the other in the west. Representatives of the two governments are currently consulting on proposals to end the crisis made during three days of U.N.-sponsored talks in Morocco that ended Saturday. U.N. spokesman Samir Ghattas said the talks will reconvene by mid-week.

Mogherini said defeating the Islamic State group in Libya requires a political agreement and that the same holds for Syria, where the EU strongly supports U.N. envoy Staffan de Mistura's effort to arrange local cease-fires to pave the way toward a broader solution.

She urged the international community to do more to win the "battle for hearts and minds" and counter the Islamic State and other terrorist groups trying to revive "a fabricated clash of civilizations."

She also said war, terrorism and poverty are forcing millions of people to flee in search of a better future, and the phenomemon of migration must be addressed on many fronts.

"We cannot let the Mediterranean, the cradle of millennial civilizations, turn into a grave for tens of thousands of innocent people," Mogherini said.

She also called for an urgent "sustainable solution" in Ukraine, a new international framework to solve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, and a nuclear agreement with Iran that allows it to have a peaceful nuclear program and guarantees the security of the region and the world. □

UN finds 'alarmingly high' levels of violence against women

SOMINI SENGUPTA

© 2015 New York Times

UNITED NATIONS - The evidence is ubiquitous. The gang rape of a young woman on a bus in New Delhi sets off an unusual burst of national outrage in India. U.S. colleges face mounting scrutiny about campus rape. In South Sudan, women are assaulted by both sides in the civil war. In Iraq, jihadis enslave women for sex.

Despite the many gains women have made in education, health and even political power in the course of a generation, violence against women and girls worldwide "persists at alarmingly high levels," according to a U.N. analysis that the Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon is scheduled to present to the General Assembly on Monday.

About 35 percent of women worldwide - more than 1 in 3 - said they had experienced violence in their lifetime, whether physical, sexual, or both, the report finds. One in 10 girls under the age of 18 was forced to have sex, it says.

The subject is under sharp focus as delegates from around the world gather here starting Monday to assess how well governments have done since they promised to ensure women's equality at a landmark conference in Beijing 20 years ago - and what to do next.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, who attended the Beijing conference in 1995, is scheduled to speak Tuesday.

Since the Beijing conference, there has been measure paid equally for equal work.

The share of women serving in legislatures has nearly doubled, too, though women still account for percent of women who are murdered are killed by their partners.

Even as women's groups continue to push for laws that criminalize violence against women and children alone costs the global economy $4 trillion.

"Overall, as you look at the world, there have been no large victories in eradicating violence against women," said Valerie M. Hudson, a professor of politics at Texas A&M University who has developed world maps that chart the status of women. The vast majority of countries, by her metrics, do not have laws that protect women's physical safety.

In some cases, the laws on the books are the problem, women's rights advocates say. In some countries, like Nigeria, the law permits a man to beat his wife under certain circumstances. But even when laws are technically adequate, victims often do not feel comfortable going to law enforcement, or they are unable to pay the bribes required to file a police report.

Phumzile Mlambo-Ngcuka, the executive director of the U.N. agency for gender equity and women's empowerment - known as UN Women - said that for the laws to mean anything, governments around the world have to persuade their police officers, judges and medical personnel to take violence against women seriously.

"I am disappointed, I have to be honest," she said about the stubborn hold of violence against women.

Afghan women who cannot return to their homes live in a shelter run by Women for Afghan Women in Kabul, Afghanistan. surable, though mixed, progress on many fronts, according to the U.N. analysis. As many girls as boys are now enrolled in primary school, a sharp advance since 1995. Maternal mortality rates have fallen by half. And women are more likely to be in the labor force, though the pay gap is closing so slowly that it will take another 75 years before women and men only 1 in 5 legislators. All but 32 countries have adopted laws that guarantee gender equality in their constitutions.

But violence against women - including rape, murder and sexual harassment - remains stubbornly high in countries rich and poor, at war and at peace. The United Nations' main health agency, the World Health Organization, found that 3B

- marital rape is still permitted in many countries - new types of attacks have emerged, some of them online, including rape threats on Twitter.

Where there are laws on the books, like ones that criminalize domestic violence, for instance, they are not reliably enforced. The economic impact is huge. One recent study found that domestic vio-

Philippine military says 73 Muslim rebels dead in southern offensive

JIM GOMEZAssociated Press

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Philippine forces have killed 73 hard-line Muslim rebels and a suspected foreign militant in a three-week offensive in the restive south, where 44 anti-terror police commandos were killed in January in a clash with insurgents, the military said Monday.

Military spokesman Lt. Col. Harold Cabunoc said six soldiers had been killed and 29 others have been wounded in the assaults that started Feb. 25 and have displaced about 25,000 villagers in a marshy region in the boundary of Maguindanao and North Cotabato provinces.

Military chief of staff Gen. Gregorio Pio Catapang ordered the assault against the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Movement rebels after they attacked civilian villages. The rebels also have been implicated in the Jan. 25 killings of 44 commandos during a raid to hunt a suspected terrorist in Maguindanao.

Numbering a few hundred, the insurgents broke off a few years ago from the main Moro Islamic Libera-atrocities. They are running out of ammunition," Cabunoc told reporters.

The foreign militant was killed by Filipino marines late Saturday in a gunbattle in Maguindanao's Shariff Saydona Mustapha town, Cabunoc said. □

Gunmen open fire on mayor's convoy

CIUDAD VICTORIA, Mexico (AP) — Authorities detained four alleged cartel members Monday in connection with an attack on the mayor of the border city of Matamoros.

Herminio Garza, Tamaulipas state secretary, said in an interview with the Televisa network Monday that federal police captured four suspected gunmen before dawn. They allegedly participated in the attack on the convoy of Matamoros Mayor Leticia Salazar

Sunday night, in which the mayor and her bodyguards escaped unharmed. He said the suspects told authorities they believed the convoy belonged to rivals encroaching on their territory, not the mayor. Gunmen in two vehicles fired on Salazar's convoy, but the armored vehicle she travelled in was not hit, Garza said. One sport utility vehicle carrying Salazar's bodyguards was hit. Matamoros is the stronghold of the Gulf cartel, which has experienced intense fighting among its own factions in recent weeks. The city lies across the Rio Grande from Brownsville, Texas.

Garza said those detained could be members of the Gulf cartel, because "that's the most prevalent in that region."

Recent attacks have included a brief kidnapping of the editor of a local newspaper and a grenade attack on the local Televisa affiliate.

Officials: Investigators allege St Lucia police had 'death list'

STAN BISHOPDAVID McFADDEN*Associated Press

CASTRIES, St. Lucia (AP) — A team of independent investigators is alleging that St. Lucia's police force maintained "death lists" of people deemed to be criminals and planted guns at the scenes of police shootings to legitimize their unlawful actions, the Caribbean country's leader announced.

In a national address, Prime Minister Kenny Anthony said a team of Jamaican investigators have delivered an "extremely damning" report looking at the deaths of 12 people fatally shot by police in 2010 and 2011, while another administration was in power. The investigators from the Jamaica Constabulary Force were invited by St. Lucia's government a year after the U.S. withdrew all assistance to island police citing concerns about allegations of unlawful killings.

Quoting from the report, which was not made public, Anthony said investigators found that all the shootings reviewed were "staged by the police" but reported publicly as homicides by unknown assailants. Guns were allegedly planted by officers and members of the police high command may have been involved in covering up the truth about the long-rumored extrajudicial shootings.

"The report confirms that 'the blacklist or death lists' referenced by the media, human rights organizations, victims' families and citizens alike did exist," Anthony said. Cameron Laure, president of the Police Welfare Association in St. Lucia, said he was receiving phone calls from "many police officers" about the details disclosed by the prime minister.

"I don't even know how to react at this point. I will have to meet with the commissioner of police as well as the other members first before making a full statement," he said. Alleged tampering with evidence didn't just happen at scenes of police-related fatalities, Anthony disclosed. During their probe, the investigators disclosed that the server used by some police commanders was "deliberately tampered with," he said. The dozen killings occurred during a security initiative called "Operation Restore Confidence" as the tourism-dependent island grappled with a worrying rise in violent crime. At the time, former Prime Minister Stephenson King publicly warned criminals that "no stone will be left unturned and there will be no hiding place for anyone."

During the period under review, five of the dozen men fatally shot by police were killed in a single operation in the southern town of Vieux Fort.

In its most recent annual report on the island, the U.S. State Department complained of the "limited progress" of probes into the deadly police shootings. In 2012, local inquests concluded that six of the 12 shootings were justified. But the U.S. imposed its sanctions the following year, indicating they did not have confidence in the outcomes of the inquests. □

This year, the tournament was conducted on Sunday, March 1. The awards of the monies raised were hosted by event sponsors Hard Rock Cafe on Friday evening, March 6. The festive event is also a thank you to the volunteers who help Michelle during each year, comprised of her Canadian compatriots who live and vacation on the island, and many of her Dutch and Aruban friends with whom she shares a strong bond of community activism. Also honored were principal sponsors, La Cabana Beach Resort, Portfolio Printing, Balashi Brewery and Tropical Bottling, as well as Hard Rock Cafe. Farita Luidens of the local TV lifestyle show Nos Mainta and Ruben Garcia of Power FM radio received tribute for their steadfast support of the project. Special thanks go to the local vendors who donated prizes for the all-important raffle. They are Queens Jewelers, Diamanté Jewels & Time, Marriott Vacation Club, and Renaissance Resort.

This year, proceeds of $7,800 were distributed to Ambiente Feliz, a full time home for the mentally challenged, the Aruba Scholarship Foundation, elderly care facility Stichting Thuiszorg Aruba, and to Hycienth Palmer, who personally cooks large batches of soup that she distributes to the elderly and less fortunate.

CHICAGO (AP) — Derick Brassard scored 32 seconds into overtime and Cam Talbot made 29 saves for his fifth shutout of the season in the New York Rangers' 1-0 victory over the Chicago Blackhawks in the NHL on Sunday night. Brassard swooped in from left wing and fired a shot past Corey Crawford on the stick side after taking a cross-ice feed from Mats Zuccarello. The Rangers moved within a point of the first-place New York Islanders in the Metropolitan Division. Talbot was sharp in his 15th start in 16 games since No. 1 goalie Henrik Lundqvist has been sidelined with a neck injury. Talbot has eight career shutouts. FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — Iditarod mushers began their 1,000-mile (1,609-kilometer) trek across Alaska along a new route Monday after poor trail conditions forced organizers to push the race's start north, bypassing a mountain range. Canadian rookie Rob Cooke, who hails from Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, was the first musher to leave in Fairbanks in the staggered start.

The Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race usually kicks off 225 miles (362 kilometers) south in Willow, but officials decided to move it because of a lack of snow in the Alaska Range.

The Iditarod spans two mountain ranges, dangerous wilderness and the wind-whipped Bering Sea coast. This is only the second time Fairbanks has hosted the official start; similar low-snow conditions also moved it there in 2003. The same weather pattern that repeatedly dumped snow on the East Coast has left Alaska fairly warm and snowless this winter. Even a snowstorm projected to dump up to 9 inches of snow Friday in Anchorage turned into an all-night rain instead.

The lack of snow has made for treacherous conditions south of the Alaska Range, especially in the area of the Dalzell Gorge, considered the roughest patch for mushers and dogs. This is where many mushers were bloodied and bruised in crashes last year.

Officials said this year's conditions are worse.

The new route will reduce the number of checkpoints in the early part of the race. But it adds stops at villages that have never been part of the Iditarod — like tiny Huslia, an Athabascan village of about 300 residents.

Even though the Alaska Range has been eliminated, the race will now be run on about 600 miles (965 kilometers) of river ice, and that can cause a whole new set of obstacles to overcome.

This year's Iditarod includes 78 mushers, including 20 rookies and six former champions.

Racers leave the starting chute in two-minute intervals. Their goal is to be first musher to drive their dog team to the finish line in the coastal town of Nome.

The winner will pocket $70,000. □

Alex Cejka wins Puerto Rico Open in 5-man playoff

RIO GRANDE, Puerto Rico (AP) — Alex Cejka won the Puerto Rico Open on Sunday for his first PGA Tour title, making a 15-foot birdie putt on the first hole of a five-man playoff.

The 44-year-old Czech-born German won in his 287th start on the PGA Tour. A four-time European Tour winner, he birdied four of the first six holes and finished with a 3-under 69 in rainy, windy conditions at Trump International-Puerto Rico.

"I'm speechless," Cejka said. "I'm glad it's over. It's been a grinding week, tough week. The first victory is always the toughest. ... These guys are good. I mean this is the slogan. At least I can say I played the PGA Tour for a long time and I won. So that's a good sentence I can use when I retire."

Sam Saunders, Arnold Palmer's grandson, had a chance to force another playoff hole, but his 8-foot birdie try on the par-5 18th went to the right.

"I really felt like I hit a pretty good putt there," Saunders said. "It went right on me and I was playing it inside the hole. I'm still proud. I had a great week ... just good things going forward. Happy for Alex. He's been out here so long and he's been a great player for a long time. He deserves it. I'm very happy for him. Hopefully, I'll have more chances like this."

Jon Curran, Tim Petrovic and Argentina's Emiliano Grillo also were in the playoff.

Grillo and Curran shared the lead at 8 under with one hole left in regulation, but closed with bogeys in the second-to-last group. "Nobody even thought that two guys could make bogey on the last," Cejka said.

Grillo missed a short par putt and settled for a 70.

"It's definitely a tough one," Grillo said. "But I would take a playoff at the beginning of the week and have a chance to win the tournament. It's hard. ... It feels like I should have won this tournament by four or five shots."

Cejka had already changed clothes, thinking he had no chance to get in a playoff.

"If that would be a long par 4, people can make bogey, but a par 5 downwind — they moved the tees up — and two guys bogeyed," Cejka said. "The odds were not that good. I changed. I had everything ready to go to the airport and almost was very satisfied with a third finish. And suddenly it changed, and here I am. And I'm very, very pleased. I don't think I'm going to sleep tonight."

He quickly changed back into golf attire.

"We had a couple of minutes," Cejka said. "I had shorts on and a T-shirt and I had everything packed. Luckily, there was one more group, the final group coming, so I changed. But I didn't hit balls. Some of the guys were hitting balls in the rain or putting. But I literally just put some fresh clothes on me and some dry clothes and I was ready to go."

Curran also had a 70.

"I'm really proud of myself to put myself in the position that I was in. It was just kind of a surreal place to be," Curran said. "I had a chance to win. I was right there."

Petrovic shot a 67, and Saunders had a 68.

Scott Brown, the 2013 winner playing in the final group, had a chance to get into the playoff with a birdie on the final hole, but made a bogey to drop into a tie for 10th at 5 under. He finished with a 73.

DIVOTS: At 44 years, 3 months, 6 days, Cejka is the oldest first-time winner since Ken Duke won the 2013 Travelers at 44 years, 4 months, 25 days. ... Grillo played on a sponsor exemption. □

Major league teams wrestle with personal catchers

JAY COHEN

AP Sports Writer

MESA, Arizona (AP) — Soon after the Chicago Cubs signed Jon Lester over the winter, they brought in David Ross. Clayton Kershaw praised the work of A.J. Ellis, and the Los Angeles Dodgers re-signed the veteran catcher in January.

Then, there is Johnny Cueto and Brayan Pena in Cincinnati, and R.A. Dickey and Josh Thole in Toronto.

The concept of personal catchers, the pairing of ace pitchers and usually light-hitting backstops for a majority of their starts, has been around for decades. Steve Carlton and Tim McCarver had a successful run with St. Louis and Philadelphia, and Greg Maddux loved throwing to Eddie Perez in Atlanta. But there are a handful of teams taking a closer look at that type of arrangement this spring, with most of them trying for more flexibility for the upcoming season.

"I think it has to be a very special relationship," said Reds manager Bryan Price, a former pitching coach. "That being said, you have to be capable and willing to throw to whoever is back there. The catcher's responsibility is making that pitcher comfortable and confident that he's back there." Lester had a lot of success with Ross last season, but the revamped Cubs also acquired Miguel Montero in December. The Dodgers got Yasmani Grandal in an offseason trade with San Diego, likely pushing Ellis into a reserve role, and the Reds have emerging star Devin Mesoraco behind the plate. Russell Martin is learning how to catch Dickey's knuckleball after signing an $82 million, five-year contract with Toronto, putting Thole's roster spot in jeopardy.

It's a much different situation for Kansas City, which is mulling over a personal catcher for one of its starting pitchers to ensure Salvador Perez gets more rest. Perez set a couple of major league records last year by catching 158 games and 1,389 2-3 innings, including 15 games and 141 innings in the playoffs.

"It's just easier when you've got a guy like Sal, for me, you know he's not playing that day," manager Ned Yost said.

The most popular reason for a personal catcher is the rapport between the battery, and the im-atcher does, that could be a consideration. So there's different ways to look at it, absolutely. I don't try to get too nuts about it, I really don't."

Lester had Ross behind the plate for most of his starts last year, when he went 16-11 with a career-low 2.46 ERA. The left-hander finalized a $155 million, six-year here recently, he's obviously going to be a vital part of this team. He's not just here for me."

Ellis was behind the plate for 22 games and 164 1-3 innings as Kershaw put together one of the best seasons for a pitcher in years. The lefty was 21-3 with a 1.77 ERA in 27 starts on his way to his second consecutive NL Cy Young Award portance of that relationship to the success of the team. The particular catcher and pitcher are often close friends, which helps them work together on the field. But the rise of defensive metrics, including data on pitch framing, also can help create a successful pairing.

"A part of a catcher being good is that maybe he receives velocity better," Cubs manager Joe Maddon said, "and that could be a consideration. This guy's a low-ball pitcher, this guy really handles the low-ball well, this contract with Chicago on Dec. 15, and Ross' $5 million, two-year contract was announced eight days later.

Lester has a 2.77 ERA in 29 games and 195 innings with Ross behind the plate, according to STATS. His career ERA is 3.58.

"It's always good when you have comfort, when you see comfort, when you feel comfort," Lester said after throwing to Ross in his first spring start. "That's obviously something that you always kind of fall back on."

"But like I've said in the past and and his first NL MVP trophy, Ellis has caught Kershaw for 603 1-3 innings over 86 games, compiling a 1.94 ERA.

"He's been around for three years now and he deserves a lot of credit for my success," Kershaw said. "We're on the same page and that just comes with trusting him and knowing the game. You hope you can have that rapport with all your catchers and I'm sure as Yasmani catches me more we'll get there, too. But it's definitely nice to have somebody that's been there before." □

Kaka's late goal gives Orlando City 1-1 draw with NYCFC

The Associated Press

ORLANDO, Florida (AP) — Brazil international Kaka scored in extra time for Orlando City to salvage a 1-1 draw against New York City FC in the first match for the latest expansion teams to join Major League Soccer.

New York appeared to be to be on its way to victory in the 76th minute when Mix Diskerud took a pass from David Villa just outside the area and rifled a curling shot that sneaked inside the far post to go up 1-0. But Orlando was awarded a free kick in the 91st minute after Kevin Molino was fouled 10 yards outside the area, setting up Kaka's goal on a deflection off New York's wall.

The 32-year-old Kaka, who played in the World Cup for Brazil in 2002, 2006 and 2010, signed a three-and-a-half year deal with Orlando last July after terminating his contract with AC Milan. He was on loan to San Paulo FC in the MLS off-season.

"The result wasn't what we wanted, but everything that happened today was really incredible," Kaka said. "We have a lot to improve, but it was a really special day for everyone on this team."

A crowd of 62,510 watched the match, the second-highest attendance for an MLS inaugural game after the 69,255 people who watched the L.A. Galaxy's debut in 1996.

In Seattle, U.S. national team captain Clint Dempsey scored twice and Obafemi Martins added a goal to help the Sounders beat New England 3-0.

Dempsey opened the scoring in the 25th minute on a penalty after being taken down in the area by New England's Juan Agudelo. He put the match out of reach in the 67th with a goal off a pass from Marco Pappa.

Elsewhere, short-handed Sporting Kansas City was held to a 1-1 draw against the New York Red Bulls.

Sporting opened the scoring in the 50th minute when Ike Opara headed in Benny Feilhaber's cross. Lloyd Sam got the equalizer four minutes later. □

More money available as NFL teams dive into free agency

ARNIE STAPLETON

AP Pro Football Writer

Some teams go wild spending for veterans in free agency. Others prefer to focus on the fresh crop of talent at American universities.

Free agency philosophies vary almost as much as teams' uniforms, and they can change year to year depending on the budget. Fans love free agency because most of the players are known quantities, if not household names. But it's important to remember when the market opens Tuesday that there are always reasons these players are available in the first place, be it consistency, character, chemistry or simply cost.

"In a perfect world," Bears general manager Ryan Pace said, "you address a lot of your needs in free agency to open up the draft for [the] best player available."

Broncos boss John Elway has made some splashy moves in free agency the last few years, including signing the biggest free agent ever in Peyton Manning. He's also lured Louis Vasquez, Wes Welker, T.J. Ward, Aqib Talib and DeMarcus Ware to the Broncos.

He's more strapped for cash this year, even with Manning's $4 million pay cut.

Like just about every general manger, he swears he'd rather pick his players on draft day than recruit them — even though he can wine and dine them at his own "Elway's" steakhouse. "Our philosophy is to build in the draft and then add with free agency," Elway said. "We've just been fortunate (to) get some very good high-profile players." Like most roster builders, Elway prefers players seeking their second contract because they're experienced but still in their prime. Still, he's grabbed the likes of Jim Leonhard, Keith Brooking and Brandon Stokley from the NFL's bargain bin, and all of them paid big dividends for a year.

Finding comfort on the other side of the spectrum is Packers GM Ted Thompson, whose team was well under the salary cap last year as it chose not to spend about $10 million in available funds.

While some flustered fans argue that money might have made a difference in reaching the Super Bowl, "we don't necessarily look at it like that," Thompson said. "We feel like we understand what the cap means. It doesn't mean we roll over money every year and it doesn't mean we spend to the last penny. We run our business the way we think it should be run. We like to get in position where we make football decisions and don't make economic decisions."

Like Green Bay, the Steelers have traditionally stayed quiet in the spring only to roar in the fall. They've found a happy middle ground, bringing in the likes of lesser-known, lower-cost free agents such as Arthur Moates and Brice McCain. This year, teams have more money to throw around with the salary cap rising $10 million to $143.2B million.

That's good news for the likes of Ndamukong Suh, Devin McCourty, Julius Thomas, Byron Maxwell, DeMarco Murray and others looking to cash in. And while every team would love to land one of these crown jewel free agents, most swear they'd prefer to find the next big player in the draft.

The Redskins used to "win" every offseason — in part because they'd get a head-start on it by continually missing the play-offs. Mostly, however, it was because Dan Snyder threw around his money to sign high-profile players like Deion Sanders, Bruce Smith and Albert Haynesworth.

The pendulum has swung in the last few years, and new GM Scott McCloughan had this to say: "You start dabbling too much in free agency, sometimes you're getting older guys, you get the medical history" and players set in their ways.

"I think the best-case scenario is you draft and mold your own (players) and resign your own," he said. "But free agency is still there to be used to make a roster stronger, too."

Several teams are carrying over wads of money they did not spend in 2014, giving them higher adjusted salary cap numbers. The highest such total is Jacksonville at $168.4 million.

"You have to be wise to not mortgage the future," Jaguars GM Dave Caldwell said. "There's no sense of urgency for us to go out and spend for the sake of spending, but we'll be aggressive. If there is a player we want, we're going to do what we need to do to get him." □

Colts parting ways with longtime standout WR Reggie Wayne

MICHAEL MAROT

AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indianapolis Colts announced Friday that they would part ways with one of the greatest receivers in franchise history and allow Reggie Wayne will become an unrestricted free agent next week.

"Reggie is one of the greatest men to ever wear the horseshoe, and we have been blessed to watch him play for the past 14 years," owner Jim Irsay said in a statement. "When he first took the field with us in 2001, we knew this day would eventually arrive. That reality is one of the things that makes pro football such a tough business."

Despite having one of the most storied careers in franchise history, the 36-year-old Wayne was slowing down.

He missed the last nine games in 2013 with a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee and was hobbled during the second half of last season with a torn left triceps. His record streak of 82 consecutive games with three or more catches ended in December. In Indy's three playoff games, Wayne had one catch for 12 yards.

Until getting hurt, the New Orleans native had produced incredible numbers. He's second in franchise history in receptions

(1,070), yards receiving (14,345), touchdown catches (80) and 100-yard games (43). Peyton Manning and Wayne formed the NFL's second-most prolific quarterback-receiver duos in completions (953) and yards (10,602), trailing only Manning and former teammate Marvin Harrison. He played in more games (211) and won more games (143) than any player in Colts' history, had four 100-catch seasons, eight 1,000-yard seasons, six Pro Bowl selections, 12 playoff appearances and one Super Bowl ring.

If Wayne doesn't play again, he will retire at No. 7 in NFL history in receptions and No. 8 all-time in yards receiving.

He is leaving Indy in the same heartbreakingly manner as Manning, Harrison and Dwight Freeney — without a retirement ceremony.

"He was that consistent leader," said Gary Brackett, Indy's defensive captain who was let go in the 2012 salary purge that also included Manning.

"It's very rare in sports that your leader is also a Hall-of-Famer. Reggie was always a guy you could rely on. Guys gravitated to him because he did things the right way." □

Google providing car insurance quotes in latest expansion

MICHAEL LIEDTKE

AP Technology Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) —

Google is helping California drivers shop for car insurance as part of a new service that could foreshadow the Internet company's latest attempt to shake up a long-established industry.

The feature unveiled Thursday compares auto insurance quotes from up to 14 carriers that are participating in the comparisons. The policies can then be bought online or through an agent. Google will receive a cut from the insurance sales.

The Mountain View, California, company says the size of the commissions won't influence how it ranks the price quotes.

Google Inc. plans to provide car insurance quotes in other states and sign up more carriers, too. The list of initial participants in California includes MetLife, Mercury Insurance and 21st Century Insurance. Some of the largest auto insurance providers, including State Farm, Allstate, Progressive and Geico, haven't joined Google's service.

Progressive and Allstate's esurance.com also provide auto insurance price comparisons.

The major auto insurers may be leery of Google, which has been using the power and profits from its dominant Internet search engine and other popular digital services to challenge the status quo in other industries.

Google already has designed a driverless car that is still being tested on a private track and is financing various projects in medical research. It's also building high-speed Internet access networks in cities scattered across the U.S. and preparing to sell wireless data plans directly to consumers later this year.

Google is probably using its auto insurance comparison service to learn more about how the industry works so it can eventually underwrite and sell policies on its own, said Forrester Research analyst Ellen Carney.

"They are getting all the data that they need to do it," Carney said. "I think there is definitely more to come here."

A Google spokesman,

however, said the company has no plans to sell or underwrite insurance. The debut of Google's insurance price comparison service validated a prediction that Carney made two months ago about Google's intentions. In a blog post, Google said it is just trying to give people a better understanding of financial products. The company already has been offering a tool that compares credit cards. □

GM plans $5B buyback, averts fight with hedge funds

TOM KRISHER

AP Auto Writer

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors announced a $5 billion stock buyback as part of a plan to return more cash to investors. In return, an activist shareholder decided to drop a potentially divisive bid for a seat on the company's board. The moves, announced Monday, are part of a deal with Harry Wilson, a former member of the government task force that restructured GM coming out of its 2009 bankruptcy.

Wilson, who represents four hedge funds which own about 2 percent of the company, had previously accused GM of hoarding cash to the detriment of shareholders and had sought an $8 billion buyback and a board seat.

But on Monday he said he was impressed at how quickly GM's management responded, adding that the company agreed to just about everything the funds wanted.

"We basically said thank you," Wilson said.

GM had $25.2 billion in cash at the end of last year, part of what it called a "fortress balance sheet" designed to withstand another financial crisis. Going forward the automaker plans to maintain a cash balance of $20 billion and aims to keep its investment-grade credit rating. The share repurchase will begin immediately and finish before the end of 2016. Investors liked the announcement. GM shares rose 97 cents, or 2.7 percent, to $37.51 in midday trading Monday. Talks with Wilson's group had been going on for about two weeks, GM CEO Mary Barra said Monday. She said other major shareholders agreed with the buyback. She indicated that the buyback might have come without Wilson's prodding. "We were on a path to do this anyway," Barra said Monday.

GM recently announced plans to boost its quarterly dividend by 20 percent to 36 cents. □

US indexes climb as stock market bull run turns six

STEVE ROTHWELL

AP Markets Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market's bull run turned six on Monday. The anniversary was marked with modest gains. Stocks were rebounding from a big sell-off on Friday when the market slumped after an unexpectedly strong jobs report. The healthy hiring picture bolstered speculation that the Federal Reserve will raise its interest rates sooner than had previously been expected.

On Monday, General Motors was among the biggest gainers after announcing a $5 billion stock buyback plan. Deal news also gave the market a boost. Macerich, a real estate investment trust, jumped after bigger rival Simon Property made a hostile bid for the company.

Stocks are becoming more volatile as investors try to assess when the Federal Reserve will start to raise interest rates and the impact that will have on the economy. The Fed has kept its benchmark lending rate close to zero for six years, underpinning the run in stocks that stretches back to March, 2009.

"Every time the market settles in on what the Fed will do, it gets spooked," said Jim Dunigan, chief investment officer at PNC Asset Management. "Today, that anxiety subsided a bit."

The Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 8.17 points, or 0.4 percent, to 2,079.43. The Dow Jones industrial average gained 138.94 points, or 0.8 percent, to 17,995.72. The Nasdaq composite climbed 15.07 points, or 0.3 percent, to 4,942.44.

GM was among the biggest gainers on Monday. The automaker announced a plan to buy back its own stock. The move is part of a deal with Harry Wilson, an activist investor and a former member of the government task force that restructured GM coming out of its 2009 bankruptcy. In exchange, Wilson agreed to withdraw his hostile candidacy for the Detroit automaker's board of directors. The company's stock rose $1.12, or 3.1 percent, to $37.66.

Macerich, a real estate investment trust that specializes in retail properties, was another winner.

Its stock climbed $6.04, or 7 percent, to $92.76 after Simon Property made a hostile bid of $16 billion in cash and stock for the company.

The S&P 500 has tripled since bottoming out at 676.53 six years ago in the wake of the housing market collapse and the Great Recession. The streak of gains is the fourth longest since the 1940s and has pushed the stock market to record levels. Despite those sizeable gains, few analysts are calling an end to the bull market just yet.

Scott Wren, a senior global equity strategist at the Wells Fargo Investment Institute, says investors should still take advantage of any sell-offs to add to their positions. □

Alcoa to buy RTI in $1.5B deal, expand aerospace push

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alcoa is taking another step to bolster its stake in the aerospace industry with a $1.5 billion deal to buy titanium supplier RTI International Metals.

The New York-based company said Monday that it will buy the specialty metal products company in an all-stock deal. Alcoa said the aerospace and defense industries accounted for 80 percent of Pittsburgh-based RTI's revenues last year.

Alcoa has been shifting from its traditional role of mining and smelting aluminum to becoming a more diversified maker of lightweight metal and alloy products for aerospace, autos and other industries. It has benefited from demand for aluminum and other lightweight materials used to make planes more fuel-efficient. Last week, Alcoa said it completed its acquisition of the German titanium and aluminum structural castings company Tital. That company's titanium castings are used in aircraft engines and frames. It also completed in the fourth quarter the purchase of Firth Rixson, which makes alloy parts for jet engines. For its latest deal, Alcoa plans to trade slightly more than 2.8 Alcoa shares for each RTI share. That equals a value of $41 per RTI share and represents a premium of 50 percent to RTI's Friday closing price of $27.28.

The $1.5 billion deal value includes $330 million in RTI cash and up to $517 million in the company's convertible notes.

Alcoa also said Friday that it will review 14 percent of its global smelting capacity and 16 percent of its refining capacity for possible curtailment or divestiture. The company has curtailed, closed or sold 31 percent of its smelting capacity since 2007.

Shares of RTI International Markets Inc. jumped 39 percent, or $10.62, to $37.90 in midday trading on Monday. Alcoa Inc. shares fell 85 cents, or 5.9 percent, to $13.63. □

Pearls Before Congress

GAIL COLLINS

© 2015 New York Times

Welcome to a whole new world. In Congress, that is. Not in the actual world. Control your expectations, for heaven's sake. You may have noticed that in an orgy of bipartisan cooperation, Congress passed a bill last week funding the Department of Homeland Security until the fall. Then, on Wednesday, the House passed a bipartisan bill funding the Amtrak system. And then everybody went away because it was, you know, going to snow.

But, still, bipartisan cooperation. It all started with the Senate. Republicans have been horrified to discover that whenever the now-minority Senate Democrats don't like something, they can simply filibuster, requiring 60 votes to move the bill forward. The Democrats always complained bitterly when the Republicans pulled that trick on them, but now they say the circumstances are totally different. The Democrats demanded that the homeland security funding bill be passed without any side assaults on President Barack Obama's immigration program. And Mitch McConnell, the majority leader, eventually had to give in. In a way, you could look at last week's homeland security crisis as similar to the reported theft of a $150,000 gown, covered entirely in pearls, which actress Lupita Nyong'o wore to the Academy Awards. Later, the disgruntled thief called TMZ and said he had left the dress in a hotel restroom out of disgust after he had two of the pearls appraised and discovered they were fake.

So, good news is that the Department of Homeland Security is going to be funded. Also, that very attractive gown is back.

The bad news is that we've now hit the point where keeping the government running sounds like a big victory. And the pearls weren't real.

Irony abounds. Who expected the Senate Republicans to be surprised when the Democrats started filibustering? Who knew dress thieves had such principled standards?

The Senate Democrats' success really ticked off the Republicans in the House, which nurtures a long and glorious tradition of hating the Senate, no matter who's in charge. (The Senate ignores the House completely.)

"If we're going to allow seven Democratic senators to decide what the agenda is ... then we might as well just give them the chairmanships, give them the leadership of the Senate," groused Rep. Raúl Labrador. Labrador is a leading member of a superconservative Republican caucus, which was created recently, with the apparent goal of bossing House Speaker John Boehner around. In its debut performance, the caucus managed to kill a bill to fund the Department of Homeland Security for just three weeks.

It is true that Labrador is the only member of Congress with the same name as a large, friendly retriever, but he can be really strict.

Pop Quiz: After conservative Republicans killed Boehner's bill to fund the Department of Homeland Security for three weeks, Boehner realized that:

- A) Homeland security isn't actually all that big a deal.
- B) His own right wing was completely crazy, and, if he wanted to get through the year, he was going to have to work with the Democrats.
- C) If ands and buts were candy and nuts, every day would be Christmas."

Yes! Boehner seems to have realized that he's going to have to work with the Democrats. Also, he said that thing about the candy and nuts, but nobody really knew what he was talking about.

Both the homeland security bill and the Amtrak funding were passed with unanimous Democratic support and huge Republican defections. The Amtrak bill, by the way, is more ambitious than your normal kicking-of-the-can-down-the-road legislation. There's money to actually improve the infrastructure, which is more than Congress has managed to come up with lately for highways and bridges. It also opens up the wonderful world of rail transit to pet dogs and cats, which I have to say is something most of us were not anticipating. The last bit seems to be the inspiration of a California Republican who owns a French bulldog that likes to travel. It is possible the program may be limited to small animals, but we will refrain making any jokes about aggrieved Labradors.

So this appears to be the path to the future: Senate Democrats will block anything they don't like, forcing the Senate majority leader, Mitch McConnell, to compromise. In the House, the Labradorians won't vote for any Senate compromises, so Boehner will need the Democrats to pass any legislation that could actually make it into law.

Here we go — four fiscal cliffs in the offing, and if the Republican majority wants to avoid falling off any of them, they'll have to join hands with the Democrats and tango. We won't get any big, dramatic reforms, but we might avoid any big dramatic disasters.

Plus poodles on Amtrak. Who knew? □

The Temptation of Hillary

DAVID BROOKS

© 2015 New York Times

Hillary Clinton's record is more moderate than the Democratic primary voter today. So it was always likely that she would move left as the primary season approached. It's now becoming clearer how she might do it. She might make a shift from what you might call human capital progressivism to redistributionist progressivism.

For many years, Democratic efforts to reduce inequality and lift middle-class wages were based on the theory that the key is to improve the skills of workers. Expand early education. Make college cheaper. Invest in worker training. Above all, increase the productivity of workers so they can compete.

But a growing number of populist progressives have been arguing that inequality is not mainly about education levels. They argue that trying to lift wages by improving skills is an "evasion." It's "whistling past the graveyard."

The real problem, some of them say, is concentrated political power. The oligarchs have rigged the games so that workers get squeezed. Others say the problem is stagnation. It's not that workers don't have skills; the private economy isn't generating jobs. Or it's about corporate power. Without stronger unions shareholders reap all the gains. People in this camp point out that inflation-adjusted wages for college grads have been flat for the past 14 years. Education apparently hasn't lifted wages. The implication? Don't focus on education for the bottom 99 percent. Focus on spreading wealth from the top. Don't put human capital first. Put redistribution first. Over the past few months a stream of Democratic thinkers and politicians, including natural Clinton allies, have moved from the human capital emphasis to the redistributionist emphasis. (It's a matter of emphasis, not strictly either/or.) For Clinton herself, the appeal is obvious. The redistributionist agenda allows her to hit Wall Street and CEOs — all the targets that have become progressive bêtes noires. Unfortunately, this rising theory is wrong on substance and damaging in its effects.

It is true that wages for college grads have been flat this century, and that is troubling. But this is not true of people with post-college degrees, who are doing nicely. Moreover, as Lawrence Katz of Harvard points out, the argument that college doesn't pay is partly a product of a short-time horizon. Since 2000, the real incomes of the top 1 percent have declined slightly. If you limited your view to just those years, you'd conclude that there is no inequality problem, which is clearly not true.

On an individual level, getting more skills is the single best thing you can do to improve your wages. The economic rewards to education are at historic highs. Americans with a four-year college degree make 98 percent more per hour than people without one. The median college-educated worker will make half-a-million dollars more than a high-school-educated worker over a career after accounting for college costs.

Research by Raj Chetty of Harvard and others suggests that having a really good teacher for only one year raises a child's cumulative lifetime income by $80,000. "What I find destructive," says David Autor of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, "is the message that if you don't get into the top 1 percent then you're out of the game. That's deeply, deeply incorrect."

Autor's own research shows that skills differences are four times more important than concentration of wealth in driving inequality. If we could magically confiscate and redistribute the above-average income gains that have gone to the top 1 percent since 1979, that would produce $7,000 more per household per year for the bottom 99 percent. But if we could close the gap so that high-school-educated people had the skills of college-educated people, that would increase household income by $28,000 per year.

Focusing on human capital is not whistling past the graveyard. Worker productivity is the main arena. No redistributionist measure will have the same long-term effect as good early-childhood education and better community colleges, or increasing the share of men capable of joining the labor force.

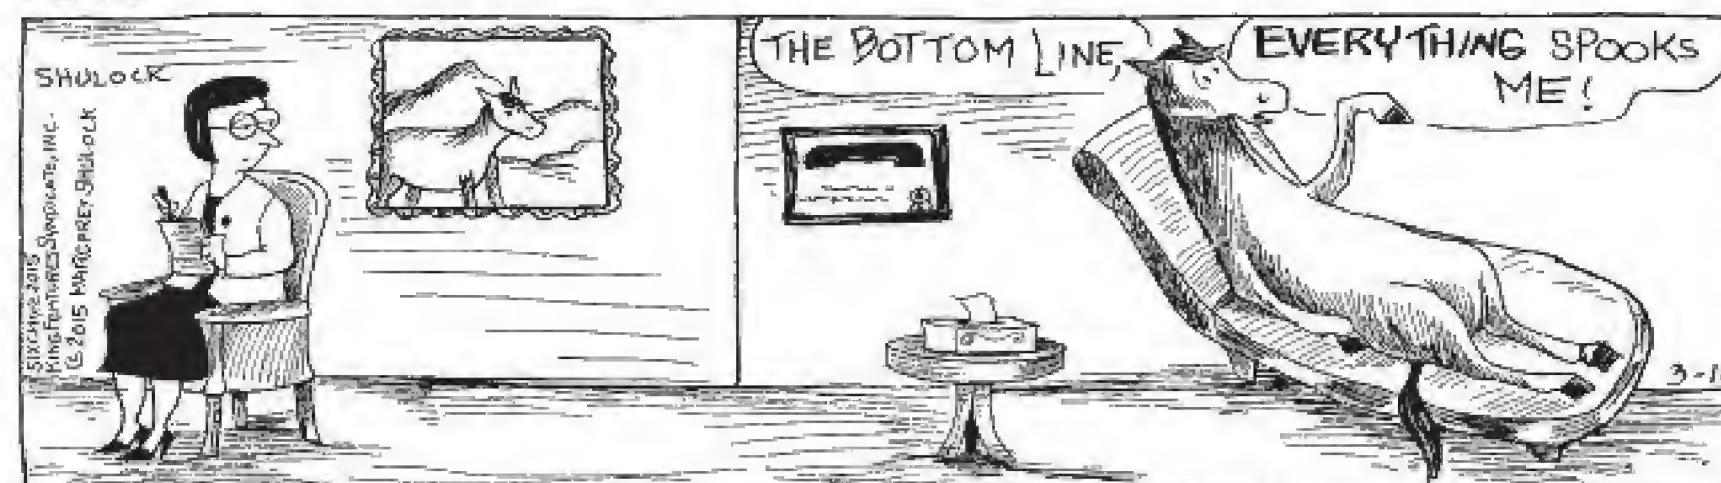

The redistributionists seem to believe that modern capitalism is fundamentally broken. That growth has permanently stagnated. That productivity should no longer be the focus because it doesn't lead to shared prosperity.

But their view is biased by temporary evidence from the recession. Right now, jobs are being created, wages are showing signs of life. Those who get more skills earn more money. Today's economy has challenges, but the traditional rules still apply. Increasing worker productivity is the key. Increasing incentives to risk and invest is essential. Shifting people into low-productivity government jobs is not the answer. It's clear why Clinton might want to talk redistribution. On substantive policy grounds, it would be destructive to do so. And, in the general election, voters respond to the uplifting and the unifying, not the combative and divisive. □

Solar-power plane airborne on historic round-the-world trip

AYA BATRAWY

Associated Press

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — With its wings stretched wide to catch the sun's energy, a Swiss-made solar-powered aircraft took off from Abu Dhabi just after daybreak Monday in a historic first attempt to fly around the world without a drop of fossil fuel.

Solar Impulse founder André Borschberg was at the controls of the single-seat aircraft when it lumbered into the air at the Al Bateen Executive Airport. Borschberg will trade off piloting with Solar Impulse co-founder Bertrand Piccard during layovers on a 35,000-kilometer [21,700-mile] journey.

Some legs of the trip, such as over the Pacific and Atlantic oceans, will mean five days and five nights of flying solo. Both pilots have been training hard for this journey, which will span 25 flight days over five months before this Spruce Goose of renewable energy returns to Abu Dhabi in late July or August.

"It is also exciting because you know, you simulate, you calculate, you imagine, but there is nothing like testing and doing it in real," Borschberg said just hours before takeoff. "I am sure we are all confident and hopefully we will be able to see each other here in five months."

The Solar Impulse 2 aircraft, a larger version of a single-seat prototype that first flew five years ago, has a wingspan of 72 meters (236 feet), larger than that of the Boeing 747. Built into the wings are 17,248 ultra-efficient solar cells that transfer solar energy to four electrical motors that power the plane's propellers. The solar cells also recharge four lithium poly-typical passenger jet takes just one hour to make the same journey. Piccard says the best speed for the light-weight Si2 — made of carbon fiber — is at about 25 knots, or 45 kph (28 mph). Borschberg has been practicing yoga and Piccard self-hypnosis in order to calm their minds and manage fatigue during the long solo flights. They Armbands placed underneath their suits will buzz if the plane isn't flying level. The plane also does not have a pressurized cockpit so Borschberg and Piccard will be able to feel the changes in temperature. The pilot's blood oxygen levels constantly will be monitored and sent back to ground control. The plane will reach an tos from friends with him on the flight, though he declined to say what.

Piccard is no stranger to aviation feats. In 1999, he and another man succeeded in the first non-stop balloon circumnavigation of the world.

After two stops in India, the Si2 will head to China, where it will stay for a month until the days are longer to catch more of the sun's energy. It will also make stops in Myanmar, Hawaii, Phoenix, Arizona and New York's John F. Kennedy International Airport. The path across the Atlantic will depend on the weather and may include stops in southern Europe or Morocco.

Those curious can follow the aircraft on Solar Impulse's website and track its battery status, energy consumption, location and flight path, as well as how much the pilot has slept and how much food and water he has left. There is also a live feed of the plane's Monaco-based control room with occasional footage from the cockpit. Borschberg and Piccard say the flight is to make the world "confront the Conference on Climate Change of the United Nations, which will define the new Kyoto protocol in December 2015 in Paris." All countries are supposed to present targets for a new global climate agreement at the meeting. □ mer batteries. At around 2,300 kilograms (5,070 pounds), the Si2 weighs about as much as a minivan or mid-sized truck. An empty Boeing 747, in comparison, weighs some 180,000 kilograms (400,000 pounds).

The Si2 is heading first to nearby Muscat, Oman, where it will land after about 10 hours of flight. A aim to rest a maximum of 20 minutes straight, repeating the naps 12 times over a 24-hour period. Goggles worn over the pilot's eyes will flash lights to wake him up.

Neither pilot will be able to stand in the cockpit while flying, but the seat reclines for stretching and its cushion can be removed for access to a toilet.

altitude of around 28,000 feet (8,500 meters) during the day to catch the sun's rays and at night dip to around 5,000 feet (1,500 meters) when flying over the ocean.

"You have to make the cockpit like your own house for a week in the air," Piccard said, telling The Associated Press he will keep a few small mementos from friends with him on the flight, though he declined to say what.

PlayStation network debuts 'Powers' scripted series

FRAZIER MOORE

AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Ability does not imply accomplishment. And accomplishment is no prerequisite for fame.

This we know all too well from reality TV. (Hint: Snooki.) But today's viral sprawl of celebrity is explored in fresh fashion by a new series spawned from what some viewers might deem an unlikely source: comic books.

The series' 10-episode season is the latest blossoming of scripted TV fare from unexpected sources: Home base for "Powers" is the PlayStation network, where it arrives as that network's first original scripted series. Starting Tuesday, "Powers" will be free to PlayStation subscribers, with the first episode free to anyone for streaming through the PlayStation Store web site (a PlayStation console is not required). Subsequent episodes will be available for purchase by non-subscribers.

"Powers" is set in a two-tier society where ordinary humans must coexist with a superior class who, thanks to random distribution, are endowed with any of a smorgasbord of superpowers which they employ for good or, just as often, for non-heroic purposes like crime, carousing or courting self-promotion.

Maintaining order among super-humans places a heavy burden on law enforcement.

"Powers" focuses on a pair of homicide detectives, Christian Walker and Deena Pilgrim, who investigate cases involving those people of disruptive privilege known as Powers.

Such police work would be a challenging, often thankless assignment for anyone, but it's all the more so for Walker: He used to be a superstar superhero, with a super-bad-guy reputation adding spice to his renown. But then his powers went away.

Today he's remembered, even jeered, for his by-gone spandex-clad identity, Diamond, as he plods through his workdays as a standard-issue gumshoe. The department's only cop who can identify with the Powers elite, he is haunted by memories of flying and other abilities he once possessed.

"Sometimes I forget I lost mine," says Walker [played by series star Sharlto Copley] in the premiere. "I can still feel 'em. Like a phantom limb."

But in the lingo of this star-centric society, Walker is a has-been, a washed-up idol, even as he demonstrates that heroes are by no means necessarily super-heroes.

"What's more heroic than 'I lost my super powers, but now I'm gonna speak for those who don't have them?'" says Brian Michael Bendis, who co-created the "Powers" comic and is an executive producer of the series.

"That's massively heroic — probably the most heroic thing he's ever done!"

The first case for Walker and Pilgrim is investigating the death of a well-known superhero while tracking down Calista (Oleya Rutlin), a mysterious young woman who, like every wannabe star, is convinced she possesses something special (in her case, budding super powers) and will do whatever it takes to be discovered. □

'Simpsons' co-creator, philanthropist Sam Simon dies at 59

FRAZIER MOORE

AP Television Writer

Sam Simon, a co-creator of "The Simpsons" and animal-rights advocate who made a midlife career shift into philanthropy and channeled much of his personal fortune into social causes, has died.

Simon died Sunday at his home in Pacific Palisades, Calif., his agent, Andy Patman said. He was 59.

He was diagnosed with advanced colon cancer in 2011.

After stints writing for "Taxi," "Cheers" and "The Tracey Ullman Show," Simon helped launch "The Simpsons." During his writing and producing career, he collected nine prime-time Emmy awards.

He left "The Simpsons" after its fourth season under a deal that rewarded him with ongoing royalties from the show, which is now in its 26th season.

He then established the Sam Simon Foundation, which rescues dogs from animal shelters and trains them to assist the disabled. He also donated to Mercy for Animals and the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, among other groups. In 2013, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals' Norfolk, Va., headquarters were christened the Sam Simon Center in recognition of his support for that organization.

Simon also funded a Los Angeles food bank.

In an interview with The Associated Press in 2013,

Simon voiced a desire to spend all of his money on charitable causes.

"I'm supporting the charities that I supported during my lifetime," he said, "and I want to continue to do that." Simon had grown up in Beverly Hills across the street from Groucho Marx, though his father was in the garment industry, not show business.

After turning his drawing talent into a job at an animation studio that made cartoons for kids, Simon submitted a script, on spec, to the ABC comedy "Taxi." His script was bought and produced, and Simon, in his 20s, was hired as a staff writer and soon rose to be the showrunner.

From there he joined a new NBC sitcom called

"Cheers," where he was staff writer for its defining first three seasons.

In 1987 he became a writer and executive producer on the Fox sketch-comedy series "The Tracey Ullman Show," where he was teamed alongside James L. Brooks, with whom he had worked on "Cheers" and "Taxi," and cartoonist

Matt Groening. This trio became the founding fathers of "The Simpsons." On Monday, Groening saluted Simon's "phenomenal talents, sharp intelligence and sly sense of humor," while Brooks called him "truly one of the great ones."

Jeong says 'Hangover' role inspired by wife

DAVID BAUDER
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Ken Jeong says that much of the inspiration for his memorably angry Mr. Chow character in "The Hangover" movie was a reaction to his wife's fight against breast cancer at the time.

His small role in the 2009 comedy, which included leaping naked out of a car trunk to attack someone, was so wildly over-the-top that he won an MTV Movie Award for it.

Even after earning the role, however, he wasn't going to take it. He explained in a short film to accompany the upcoming PBS documentary, "Cancer: The Emperor of All Maladies," that he was caring for his wife, Tran Ho, and their one-year-old twins as she was undergoing chemotherapy.

"Tran encouraged me to do it," Jeong said in an interview. "She thought I was suffering from caregiver burnout."

He channeled his rage at his wife's plight into the character, he said. One monologue that wound up being cut from the film but used as a DVD outtake turned into a pure rant that Jeong sees now he was doing to unburden himself. Jeong, who is Korean, slipped in some dialogue in Vietnamese purely as an inside joke for his wife, who is Vietnamese.

He accepted his MTV award with an emotional speech just after the couple learned that she was cancer-free for two years. Before he could talk about it to the media following the show, he slipped into an alley behind the theater and broke down crying. Shortly after that, the Stand Up to Cancer organization asked him to do some volunteer work, and that included the online film that is being used to promote the PBS project, a film by Barak Goodman and Ken Burns that brings to life the Pulitzer Prize-winning book by Siddhartha Mukherjee. The three-part film airs on PBS March 30, 31 and April 1.

Tran Ho has now been cancer-free for six years.

"She's just a pillar of strength," Jeong said. "She's my biggest inspiration because she handled it with such grace and strength and class. Even if I wasn't married to her, I'd be in awe of her."

The video is being posted Monday on the site www.cancerfilms.org. □

James Patterson launches grant program for libraries

HILLEL ITALIE

AP National Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Having handed out more than $1 million to help independent bookstores, James Patterson is now sharing his wealth with some other vital, but often struggling institutions: School libraries. The best-selling author announced Monday that he was donating $1.25 million through a grant program administered with Scholastic Reading Club, a division of Scholastic, Inc. Libraries or supporters of libraries can seek donations $1,000 to $10,000. Scholastic will match each donation with "Bonus Points" that can be used to purchase classroom materials. According to Patterson, requests can be for anything from fixing a computer system to paying for a school reading project.

"James Patterson is such a champion of books and reading for all children. We are thrilled to work with him to support school libraries, which are essential for thriving school communities," Judy Newman, president of Scholastic Reading Club, said in a statement. Patterson, who has strong memories of his weekly visits to libraries as a child, told the Associated Press during a recent interview that he wanted to "shine a light" on the problem of public schools with no libraries or underfunded libraries. In California, for instance there was just one certified school librarian for every 7,784 students in 2012-13. Chicago and Philadelphia are among the other cities that have sharply cut library staffing. More than 8,000 public schools nationwide did not have libraries in 2011-12, according to the National Center for Educational Statistics.

"A lot of schools also don't have as many books as they should have," said Patterson, adding that libraries were especially important for kids in households without books.

"There's a myth out there among some people that the kids are reading only digital books now. They're not."

The program will begin with a $250,000 donation from Patterson, with the remaining $1 million to be distributed throughout the year and additional funding likely in the future. □

He found so much outside the work to give him pleasure and left so much behind for others."

"The Simpsons" began as interstitial cartoon clips aired during the otherwise live-action "Ullman" show until, in 1989, it was spun off as a Fox half-hour of its own. Simon was named creative supervisor, and he hired the first writing staff as well as creating several Springfield citizens, including Mr. Burns, the cadaverous industrialist, and Dr. Hibbert, the buffoonish physician. The show—TV's first successful prime-time animated series since "The Flintstones" nearly three decades before—caught the public off-guard with its sassy but perceptive look at the culture and opened the door for a new television genre of animation geared toward adults.

"With 'The Simpsons,' people didn't know what they were gonna see," said Simon. "They didn't have a clue." The show was given time and free reign to flourish by the fledgling Fox network, which desperately needed a hit. "I don't think you get that sort of creative freedom with any broadcast shows today."

Simon left "The Simpsons" in 1994 owing to a strained relationship with Groening. Not only did he not play any subsequent role in the series, he claimed to never have watched it after stepping away, even as his name remained in the weekly credits along with Groening's and Brooks'.

It was a lucrative departure. Simon's exit deal entitled him to royalties from "The Simpsons" that, more than a quarter-century later, annually paid Simon tens of millions of dollars. That annuity bankrolled the causes and alternative lifestyle (including amateur boxing and high-stakes poker) that increasingly he came to embrace. "I'm not sad," Simon declared in 2013, as he battled an illness that his doctors were saying might claim him within months. "I'm happy. I don't feel angry and bitter. I want to do whatever I can to survive." □
